Near Pisco, children chase the buses for food, water and whatever they give them. The main bridge was damage and cars and trucks must go around a temporary road.

Pisco City. Destruction is seen all over the place. Few homes are still standing and many that survived have cracks in their walls. 85% of Pisco was destroyed.

Peruvian soldiers stand guarding most of streets in Pisco. Two weeks later, victims continue to look for their belongings and saving what they can.

At a park near Pisco children are entertained with clowns and games. A mobile library was set up at the park. In some areas children go to school at the main plazas or shelters.

Most victims have cleaned up what they can to make room a tent. On a house that was destroyed a sign tells the story of who survived and died.

On one of the towers it's painted 148 to remember all who died. At the main plaza a woman set up her business stand selling drinks, candies and cigarettes.

PISCO PRIDE! "There is only one PISCO" Several women play cards inside one of the tent cities the Peruvian government set up in Pisco.
